AUCTION RAISES FUNDS FOR PUBLIC INTEREST LAW INTERNSHIPS

The School of Law's Public Interest Law Project (PILP) raised nearly $16,000 at its 27th annual auction in late February. PILP provides grants each year to students who accept unpaid summer internships with nonprofit organizations that assist people with limited access to legal representation. All of the auction's proceeds go to fund these grants.

Hundreds of participants bid on a range of items, including a Tiffany bracelet, a football signed by the New York Jets, and themed meals hosted by various law school faculty. This year's event featured a Roaring Twenties theme, with everything from the Ceremonial Courtroom to the desserts decorated in the signature black and gold Art Deco style.

"Without some sort of income, students would not be able to take these internships," said Katherine Lowe, JD '20, PILP's president. "These auctions provide money for so many students, who in turn provide legal help to those in need."

"The auction is a great community-building event for the law school," said Kathy Kuhar, associate dean of students. "It brings together faculty, staff, students, alumni and their families for a fun night and a great cause."

Past PILP grants have enabled Quinnipiac Law students to do impactful work with such organizations as the Commission on Human Rights and Opportunities; the U.S. Department of Justice; the United Nations; Integrated Refugee and Immigrant Services; and the Connecticut Women's Education and Legal Fund.

While some of this year's internships have been canceled because of the COVID-19 pandemic, others are slated to continue, ensuring that those who need legal aid the most will receive it, even in turbulent times.

As far as professors treating auction winners to dinner, that will have to wait until social distancing restrictions are eased. "Considering how wonderful our professors are, I have no doubt that they'll work with students on a time to reschedule," Lowe said.

ELI'S OWNER ENJOYS A CHALLENGE

Lessons on the ice lead to business success

BY ADAM DURSO

THE SAME FOCUS and drive that helped Rick Ciardiello '87 shine on the Quinnipiac men's ice hockey team fueled his rise as an entrepreneur and owner of one of the most visible restaurant brands in Connecticut.

In addition to running his Hamden-based insurance agency, Ciardiello co-owns Eli's Restaurant Group, which includes Eli's on Whitney and Eli's Brick Oven Pizza in Hamden, Eli's Branford, Eli's Orange, Eli's Tavern in Milford, Elicit Brewing Company in Manchester and Roost, a quick-service chicken restaurant in Hamden.

For Ciardiello, building multiple businesses from the ground up took late nights, early mornings and lots of creative time management. "Let's just say I don't have much time for golf," quipped Ciardiello, a business major at Quinnipiac.

Ciardiello began his entrepreneurial journey in 1993 when he started the Ciardiello Insurance Agency with his brother, Peter. At the same time, the brothers founded Eli's Restaurant Group and opened their flagship bar, Eli's on Whitney, in 1994.

Ciardiello knew how difficult it would be to focus on two very different business ventures. For him, the risk was the reward. "My motivation in business has always been linked to how great the challenge is," he said.

As the insurance agency thrived, Eli's established itself as a favorite watering hole and restaurant among those in the Quinnipiac community. Ciardiello acknowledges the importance of his relationship with the university during those early years.

"I can still remember when they first hung the Eli's banner during basketball games in Burt Kahn Court," he said. Eli's Restaurant Group recently signed a five-year corporate sponsorship agreement with Quinnipiac. Ciardiello calls the deal a natural progression of the relationship that began 25 years ago.

"We've always been a sponsor of Quinnipiac, and they've always been great to us," he said.

Ciardiello continued to open new restaurants in Hamden and beyond. Over the years, they became favorite meeting spots for best friends and classmates, not to mention, prime first-date locations for countless couples and spouses.

"People like to share those memories with me all the time, and they really are great to listen to," he said.

In opening new establishments, Ciardiello emphasizes patience, developing management talent from within and acquiring the right real estate at the right time.

"Businesses that grow too fast often fail," he said. "Growth is essential, but it has to happen organically when the time and location are right."

In 2019, Ciardiello added Elicit Brewing Company to the Eli's Restaurant Group. The 20,000 square-foot beer garden, brewery and craft cocktail bar capitalizes on the millennial/Gen-Z craft beer boom while offering options for people who prefer spirits.

"It's basically two venues in one building, and people are really digging it," he said.

Away from work, Ciardiello prefers to spend as much time as he can with his wife, Lyssette, and their three children, Victoria, Gabriella and Nicholas. He credits his family, particularly his father, Saverio, for helping him to develop his character and work ethic. He hopes to pass on both traits to his children.

"I won't spoil them," Ciardiello said. "Everyone, my kids included, has to understand what it takes to be successful."

Hockey taught Ciardiello about family, business and life. The former right wing was enshrined in the Quinnipiac University Athletics Hall of Fame in 2003.

"I learned back then that when you work harder than the guy next to you and make yourself indispensable, it gets noticed," he said.

Ciardiello still manages to fit hockey into his busy schedule. He coaches in an elite youth league and attends as many Quinnipiac home games as he can. He also serves as a mentor for several current Bobcats.

"I tell them all the time that you can't put your initial sight on a dollar amount," Ciardiello said. "If you attack life head on and work hard, then the financial stuff, respect and titles will come later."

What challenge does Ciardiello plan on attacking next? For now, he's focused on expanding the Elicit brand and possibly opening a second location, although he hasn't ruled anything out.

"I never know what's next or from which direction an opportunity will come," Ciardiello said. "And that's the way I like it."

Rick Ciardiello '87 sits beside at Eli's on Whitney. He is the co-owner of Eli's Restaurant Group.
